Dear All,

I'm sorry to say, but I'm leaving town. My girlfriend and I have had some financial burdens recently. Some were expected, like tuition and investing money in a growing business. Some were unexpected, like how hard my portfolio was hit in this crisis and the pending underemployment of my girlfriend. In short, we could really use more income and a few days ago I was offered a second job that would help quite a bit; I had turned down several earlier, but this one was too good to pass up. I can also get her a job up there. It's in Sonoma County. Moving up there would also reduce my commuting time and money and my rent. Gianna and I discussed this in great detail and feel that it's a good step toward being able to securely marry and have children in the next few years.

My new boss wants me to move within a month. I'm still happy to help out with a website even as someone who is not a member of the commission. Should I send a letter of resignation to the city council?

Sincerely and Regretfully Yours,

Gabriel Froymovich
